CDC warns of possible measles outbreak as vaccinations for children fall during pandemic

Routine vaccinations for young children in the US fell during the first half of this year as more Americans skipped routine doctor visits and stayed home due to the pandemic, according to a report. CNBC